The elephant-bearing lava, nevertheless, was of a different character. Exactly the same lava as that containing human remains was subsequently observed, however, at another point. This did not enclose the bones of the Pliocene elephant, but it did enclose those of the mammoth or Champlain elephant, which lived after the reign of ice. These were associated, also, with the remains of other Champlain animals. Thus it was demonstrated that the man of Denise, as he has been called, was not preglacial. What remains unaccountable is the persistence of French and German anthropologists in parading the man of Denise as a specimen from the depths of the Tertiary age. Again, the river-drifts of the Somme have been set down as glacial or preglacial; and hence the human flints which they contain were made by men who lived at a period vastly more remote than...
